Front End Web Developer with experience carrying application development from planning to deployment. While supremely excited about implementing app construction from the ground up, I also get jazzed about debugging, maintenance, or testing of a product that interests me. I recently made a career transition from financial bookkeeping and retail management to software development by way of the Iron Yard Academy's Front End Engineering program. Although successful and enthusiastic in my previous line of work, I find the prospect of working with a team to produce a tangible product with a real-world impact ultimately far more exciting than sales and finance, which served as the impetus for my shift into web development.

RELEVANT EXPERIENCE

The Iron Yard Academy | Atlanta, GA

May - July 2015

Front End Engineering Student

The Iron Yard's twelve week front end engineering program consisted of over 850 hours of coding in addition to the 150 hours spent in lecture and workshops with industry experts, culminating in proficiency with HTML5, CSS3, JavaScript, JS frameworks and libraries, version control, testing, project management, and start to finish web application planning, construction and deployment.

Employing a sink-or-swim instructional style, The Iron Yard not only ensured that I am more than proficient in front end development, but am equipped with the ability to take on and teach myself new languages or frameworks with minimal need for outside training.
